“When your dad manufactures race components for all forms of racing you didn’t have a choice.”

At Just five years of age Savannah may not have known it yet, but her life and love of racing would begin in her own backyard. There were a number of outlets she could take advantage of, even from a young age.

Ten years ago Savannah and her father Derek Fitzgerald, owner of Zero Error Racing, visited the track to watch another race. Later that evening Derek returned with a new member of the family, Savannah’s first kart.

Pitt Race happens to be Derek and Savannah’s home track. When asked about favorite memories it was hard for them to choose. Being named champion last year at the banquet and being featured on the TruTV Series “Kart Life” topped the list.

The entire family has been involved with different forms of track life for quite some time. “I believe karting teaches the kids to have goals and shows the amount of effort they need to put in for everything to pan out in life. You can’t get that in just any sport. Having your family as part of the team is something specific to racing” stated Derek, “and our family is a racing family.”

Looking to the future Savannah has some immediate and long term goals. This year she would like to take a leap to the Pitt Race Full track. No matter if it is with the Skip Barber or Lucas Oil Schools or another outlet. Further in the future she isn’t sure what she wants to do. However she knows that it will be motorsports related.
